

A US Congressional Committee is [ ] whether to bring formal impeachment [ ] against President Trump.

He's accused of [ ] interference from Ukraine to help his 2020 re-election [ ] as well as witness intimidation, and obstructing [ ] and Congress.

Republican members of the committee say there is no new [ ] and [ ] the Democrats just don't like the President.

Our North America correspondent, Nick Bryant, is with us now.

What have we [ ] today?

The impeachment inquiry today [ ] more like a series of history lectures, with professors appearing on Capitol Hill to [ ] what America's Founding Fathers [ ] by high crime and misdemeanours, the constitutional standard to impeach or [ ] a president. But we have had weeks of televised [ ] now and across America they just have not [ ] public opinion, they have not moved the [ ] before. Nor has a [ ] Republican lawmaker come out and said Donald Trump should be impeached. So I [ ] what will happen from here is that before Christmas the Democrats will use their [ ] of Representatives majority to impeach Donald Trump, then [ ] Christmas, in the New Year, we look at the [ ] of Donald Trump in the US Senate, where the Republicans have the [ ] to deliver a not [ ] verdict.

STUDIO: Many thanks, Nick Bryant.