

Our diplomatic correspondent, James Robbins, is here. A sour ending to a [] gathering, but [] how did Nato emerge from this meeting? Well, this was [] going to be a factious [] I think, a bad-tempered one, given there are substantial disagreements about Nato's [] purpose, its priorities and its ability to deliver, but in fact today's formal [] of the 29 leaders, there were some successes, averting a [] crisis, heading off a move from Turkey to [] a move against the Baltic [] against a Russian threat. Present hurdy-gurdy of Turkey got some [] against terrorism. -- President Erdogan. They got some [] to declare space a new operational domain for Nato, to try and make any challenge stop they [] some disagreements but progress with others, declaring China a potential challenge and [] but I think, behind all this, Donald Trump was, as so [] the key player. He castigated members not playing enough, as he [] it, for their defence, and he [] invited to lunch those who met the spending [] they set, and I think the meeting was typical of the [] of international gatherings we've come to [] in the Trump era. Democracy is falling out with him and [] any sort of world order is [] a lot of pressure.
